As a former child star, Hilary Duff was home-schooled from the age of eight. But the new mother opted to begin her adorable son Luca's education in a more public setting - Babies First Class in Sherman Oaks on Wednesday.

The former Disney starlet, who turned 25 last Friday, covered her curvier frame in a bright coral button-up vest top with cuffed skinny blue jeans and beige studded flats.

With her blonde hair up in a loose ponytail, Hilary had her hands full carrying both a Louis Vuitton bag and her barefoot six-month-old. Luca looked to have already sprouted a tuft of blonde hair on his head and he was dressed in a simple off-white onesie, which had a blue pacifier pinned on the front.

The mother-son duo had just left the interactive 'mommy & me' programme designed by occupational therapist Jackie Rosenberg where babies are stimulated with age-appropriate toys, as well as music and movement in a group class setting.

Not seen today was Luca's father and her husband of two years, former NHL hockey player Mike Comrie, 32.

The singer/actress - seen at Pilates on Tuesday - has been hitting the gym multiple days a week to shed the excess weight following the birth of her first child last March.

'Obviously, I'm not where I want to be eventually, but I'm working hard and I'm doing everything I can to lose the weight the right way,' Duff told Us Weekly earlier this year.

'The second I start to get down like "What happened to my body?" I look at my beautiful baby and I've never been more appreciative for this body that I have.'

The former Lizzie McGuire star celebrated her birthday last week with all of her 'favourite people' at The Redbury in Hollywood.

Hilary also took a night off diaper duty to make time for a recent girl's night out at Arclight Cinemas.

And the Cinderella Story actress seems eager to return to the small screens having signed a development deal with 20th Century Fox last August.

At the time, Hilary tweeted, 'Ok it's official! Very excited about my development deal with 20th century fox!! t.v. here I come! :)
